DETAILED ACTION

Allowable Subject Matter

1. Claims 35-51 are allowed.
2. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance:

The primary reason for allowance is that the prior art does not fairly indicate a combination of both an electrically linear resistive element and a voltage breakdown element at the intersections between column and row conductors, nor does the prior art teach forming the voltage breakdown element as an unpatterned element.

Generally, the prior art of record teaches cells formed at the intersection of row and column conductors including a diode structure and an antifuse/voltage breakdown element in a series, such as US 5,818,749 to Harshfield or US 2001/0055838 to Walker et al. (cited by applicant). It is apparent, however, that a linear resistor and a diode have vastly different current-voltage properties, such that it would be unreasonable to arbitrarily substitute one for the other. Alternately, US 5,714,416 to Eichman et al. does teach a resistance element in series with a voltage breakdown element, but the resistance element merely indicates internal resistances of the voltage breakdown structure, and hence, cannot be considered linear nor can it be considered a separate element, as opposed to double inclusion of the voltage breakdown structure.

Furthermore, the prior art of record generally teaches patterning all layers disposed at the intersection of row and column conductors, such that a cell column is formed, and such that current leakage between adjacent memory cells is prevented. However, as the use of a resistor within the memory cell minimizes current leakage through cells that are not to be accessed, the presence of the resistor enables employment of an unpatterned breakdown element, which is cheaper and easier to fabricate. Hence, it is the Examiner's opinion that a person skilled in the art would not have found sufficient motivation in the prior art to combine the linear resistor and the voltage breakdown element in series between a row and column conductor, and further, would have found no motivation or feasible means for using an unpatterned voltage breakdown element.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
